INTRODUCTION

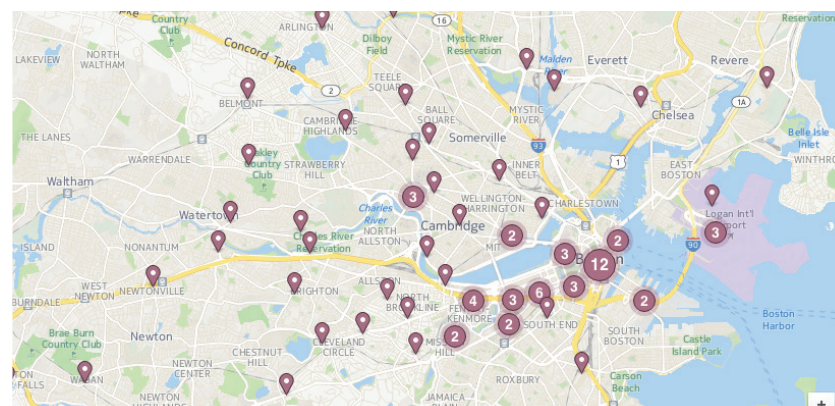

Are you feeling the itch to refresh your inbound marketing campaigns, but unsure where to begin? Inbound is all about publishing helpful and interesting content your audience wants to consume, but with the infinite number of approaches and ever-increasing creative standards, the possibilities of how your campaigns might take shape can be overwhelming.

To help get the inspiration flowing, we've collected 32 examples of truly enviable inbound marketing. Whether you want to rethink your approach to social media, email, or blogging, we've curated top-notch examples to expand your thinking. Or, perhaps you are ready to experiment with a new medium for your content. Explore the video and microsite chapters to discover what the leaders in multimedia marketing are creating to share their story.

While we've included the industry each enviable brand is operating in, don't stay confined within your vertical. This guide is all about taking a step outside of your niche to expand how you think about inbound marketing.

But before we dive in, a warning. While some may say that copying is the highest form of flattery, see these examples as a means to your content genius, not the exact playbook. Keep your own persona and product in mind, and let the overarching strategy behind each example prompt your brainstorming. You might be surprised how an international supermarket could inspire your firm's marketing, or how a backpack retailer could make you rethink content for your SaaS startup.

SOCIAL MEDIA

STARBUCKS

NICK SPALDING

Starbucks was an early adopter of social media, and today continues to use beautiful visuals to give customers the longing for a warm cup of coffee. But aside from their photography, Starbucks' Facebook page includes a myriad of extra features including job postings, contests, and even an international app. Can't get that latte out of your head? Next time you're on the go, test out the store locator embedded right in their Facebook page.

CHOBANI

When you have an extensive catalog of products, the potential for visual marketing is endless. But what about when you specialize in one product? Chobani is an excellent example of diverse photography for a single, simple item: a spoonful of yogurt. Check out Chobani's Instagram to browse colorful photos of fruit salads, pineapple smoothies, and frosted pumpkin cookies. L.L.BEAN

NICK SPALDING

When your brand has been around since 1912, how do you keep product marketing fresh? Value the customer over the product. Take L.L.Bean's Pinterest account, for example. Instead of posting repetitive photos of their traditional (but oh-so-comfy) winter boots, L.L.Bean's boards feature stunning photos of sunrise hikes and crackling campfires. With this strategy, L.L.Bean follows Pinterest best practice by curating boards around the aspirations of their target customer.

If there is one part of your marketing where you should flaunt a bit of your personality, it's social media. Taco Bell's Twitter account is a prime example. With the brand's hand-drawn doodles of unicorns and tacos, you'll feel like you've opened one of your middle school notebooks. As quirky as it is, Taco Bell has still established a consistent brand image. Plus, the brand's creative use of animated GIFs results in a social strategy you can't help but love.

Each of Everlane's social media accounts work to break down the barrier between the customer and their favorite brand. By illustrating the how and why behind what they do, Everlane provides a window into company culture and differentiates themselves against similar fashion brands. As recent social media trends shift away from the public and toward the private, Everlane has done an exceptional job of using Snapchat to send messages to their customers that feel honest and personal.

REI

As you work to raise brand awareness, often it's better to go a bit off the beaten path -- even if it means excluding yourself from the largest shopping day of the year. REI created its fair share social media buzz for Black Friday 2015 as they encouraged shoppers to #OptOut of their post-turkey trip to the mall and instead spend the day in nature. THE STORIES WE WEAR

He's Gonna Need a Good Shirt. Connie Magee. Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Dear Patagonia,

Today is my dear friend Corey's birthday, and he got a ratty, dyed, indestructible Patagonia climbing shirt from me.

The shirt belonged to me and my freshly-boyfriend Mike. I say we, because though he owned the shirt first, it was ours. He "stole/inherited" it from his best friend in high school and early climbing partner (note the old-school tag...this goes back to the early 90's). It used to be tan or grey, but somehow it got dyed purple during a late night drinking incident. No one remembers what the stain on the chest is from. I think my guy was actually wearing this shirt the first time I saw him in the Gunks and I kind of knew I was going to fall in love. In my mind's eye, Mike is flaking a rope, shy smile, blue eyes flashing, ready for the next hard line. The shirt was already old when I met Mike. He'd been through some major health problems including a kidney transplant, but he came out resilient, climbing stronger than ever- just durable. Like this purple shirt. It is the splash of color in so many memories of hundreds of amazing trips to the Dacks, White Mountains, Chatty, the Red, the New, all over Utah, Colorado, Potrero, Spain, Acadia, Cochise, Wild Iris, Vedauwoo...

It's seen nearly every state in America, late-day bouldering sessions, trips to five or six countries and was always one of the key items in the trip bag. We sometimes negotiated over who got to wear it. It has survived so many crack climbs, so many snaggy bushwhacks, so many WTF benighted descents. I think one of us was even wearing it during an unprotected bivvy in NC when the weather turned nasty, we couldn't find the rap station and we had to wrap up in ropes and leaves

More than just a Frisbee. Kern Ducote. Baltimore, MD.

"All along the Pacific Crest Trail, this served as my cutting board, fan, frisbee, and plate. It hit the ground a few too many times and cracked. Nothing ductape can't fix!" - Kern

15 Year Old Fanny. Kacie Lynn. Chattanooga, TN.

"I've had this fanny pack for 15 years. It's been with me on the farm, at concerts, everywhere. If these stains and bar grime on it could tell their stories, I'd be in jail. Just kidding!" -Kacie

Matt Looby. With a Little Help From a Friend. Horseshoe Canyon, AR.

"I tore the seat during the last day of a bouldering trip at Stone Fort, TN. I was really bummed since I loved these red pants. I asked one of my friends to patch them up so she used a piece of fabric from an old pair of pants to patch up the large hole, and also sewed up the smaller tear. I used them again for a little bit but they re-tore. So I brought them in to the Worn Wear wagon and y'all patched them right up for me! My sending pants are back in My Daughter & My Hat. Matt McNally.

Dear Patagonia,

My daughter means everything to me. Even as a young man I knew that I wanted to be a good father someday, and that I wanted to raise my kids with respect for the wilderness. My youth was a bit topsy turvy...and through all of the hurdles of my parents living two states apart, the wild lands between Salt Lake and Huntington Beach meant everything. The long drives with Dad always meandered through seascides, deserts, and canyons...delaying the inevitable drop off for just a few days longer. The mountains, campfires, and moving waters from Utah to California became the thread that kept me connected with my family. A thread that always wore well with time. Just like a good hat. I have always been a "hat guy." As a bald, bearded, beast nowadays my hats mean even more to me. I have worn numerous Patagonia and Black Diamond hats over the years. Each one getting seemingly grosser than the last. Sweat stained, torn, broken, battered and loved...just like me. My little girl loves my hats. She loves the smell and she loves to make fun of my shiny head underneath. She loves to steal them from me and she loves to hold onto them while she rides on my shoulders as we hike through the Wasatch Mountains. She laughs almost as beautifully as her mother does. She loves to keep up with her brother, she loves to sleep on her dog Moses, and she has the kindest heart you could ever imagine. I love my daughter, I love my son, I love my wife, I love the wilderness, and I love this hat.

-Matt

REPAIR IS A RADICAL ACT

WORN WEAR

a film about the stories we wear

The drive behind much of Patagonia's marketing is the Worn Wear campaign, a program that encourages customers to repair their damaged outdoor gear rather than buy new items. The heart of the campaign consists of stories told by actual customers. These narratives are enhanced with a variety of multimedia elements, including how-to articles for common clothing repairs, a beautiful Instagram account, and even a 30-minute documentary. Overall, Patagonia stands out by sharing customer stories through a nontraditional campaign angle.

COCAINENOMICS

"I would rather have a grave in Colombia than a jail cell in the U.S."
- Pablo Escobar

Cartel member José Gonzalo Rodríguez Gacha built the cartel's military arm, hiring British and Israeli mercenaries to train his men, and uniting with right-wing death squads and paramilitary groups battling Colombia's leftist guerillas.

PLATA O PLOMO
Escobar's challenge was simple: "Plata o plomo" ("Take my silver or take my lead").

Finally, the Medellín organization used vast amounts of money to bribe law enforcement and government officials. The bribes were the criminal equivalent of legitimate businesses hiring lobbyists and paying regulatory fines. Although it meant handing over "a very sizeable share of their income" in bribes, Heymann says, it was simply a line item on the cartel's profit and loss statement. Of course, the bribes came with a not-so-subtle threat of violence. Escobar's challenge, oft repeated, You're getting this email because you are one of Lady Antebellum's top listeners on Spotify. Thanks so much for listening to so much of our music.

I'm going on a solo tour and as a way to say thank you I want you to be one of the first to get access to tickets.

The presale starts Wednesday October, 14th at 10am and runs until Thursday, October 15 at 10pm. You'll be able to purchase up to 6 tickets while supplies last. The password is BELIEVER

I have a new single out and would love for you to listen to it on Spotify. It's called "The Driver" and also features Dierks Bentley and Eric Paslay. Hope you like it!

Spotify's emails master the challenge of personalization. The music streaming platform only sends emails when the content will be helpful to the reader. By leveraging the user's music interests, Spotify crafts emails that make the recipient feel like they're being rewarded for listening to what they love. Plus, there are few better ways to start your morning than to receive a personalized email from Spotify saying one of your favorite bands has released a new album.

TELL US HOW YOU REALLY FEEL.

Seriously, don't pull any punches!

Rate these samples via our feedback surveys—each review earns you 10 points, and for every 100 points, you get $10 off a full-size product order.

Step 1. Go to your Box page.

Step 2. Click on the product you would like to review, then select the "Write a Review" link below the product name.

Birchbox is another example of a brand committed to personalization. By always rooting the content in sample and purchase history, the shopper can be sure each email they receive from Birchbox will be relevant to them. In addition to suggesting the right products, the voice of the copy is helpful and honest, always reminiscent of an email from your best friend.

Airbnb's email personalization strategy is based around anticipating customer needs. The vacation accommodation site tracks your search history and lets you know when additional rentals become available that you might be interested in. As shown above, you'll also receive perfectly timed emails suggesting you take the time to relax and recharge. Each email fits into their overall marketing campaign, #BelongAnywhere -- helping customers feel at home anywhere they might explore.
